

The Digital Home Revolution

We in Northern Kentucky are in the midst of something very exciting, the digital home revolution. And, we are lucky to have our own local company, Digital Home Innovators to outfit our homes. Chad Nichols, a Ft. Thomas resident, started his company earlier this year. He and his partner are focusing on bringing you, the home owner, the best offerings in digital home entertainment and automation systems. They specialize in easy-to-use residential entertainment (TV, movies, music, pictures, videos) with optional integration of home automation, comfort, and security solutions.

We want our houses to live for today and part of achieving this goal is moving forward with technology. We all have TVs, computers, stereos, dvd players, and other technology equipment. Wouldn't it be great if they were all part of an integrated system? This is the digital home revolution; integrating all of our technologies into one easy to use and maintain network. Chad Nichols, of Digital Home Innovators said, "We are able to provide full music collections, picture photo albums, time shifted/recorded TV, home videos, and internet media content throughout the home using simple remote control menus on high definition TV displays." A complex system may include lighting control, climate control, home security monitoring and entertainment all in the same network while a simple system may be just the entertainment component. Whether complex or simple, these systems are a great way to streamline your home technology and move into the future.
